Capital Collegian

CALIFORNIA STATE UNIVERSITY,
SACRAMENTO

California State University, Sacramento is California's Capital Campus

CSUS's unique location in California's capital city, setting the University apart from other collegiate institutions, contributes immeasurably to the learning experience of the University's students. The budget of the State of California, when compared to the nations of the world, ranks among the top five. Much of this budget is administered in downtown Sacramento, five miles west of the CSUS campus.

The proximity of CSUS enhances the educational process in several ways: internships, part-time employment and career opportunities are readily available to students; and the many part-time faculty members bring to the CSUS classrooms the relevance of their concurrent professional employment in the governmental process.

Unlike some colleges surrounded by an "ivy-covered" wall, CSUS is a college without walls!

The University, its students, faculty and staff share a close working relationship with the community.

The greater Sacramento area, with approximately 1.3 million residents, is one of the fastest growing metropolitan communities of its size in the nation. The reasons for this growth include healthy employment rates and economic development, and a high quality of life.

CSUS's central location in the community and freeway proximity make it one of the most accessible of the 19 CSU campuses to both private and public transportation. Most sites in the greater Sacramento area can be reached in less than one-half hour from the campus doorstep. The Sierra-Tahoe recreational areas and the many historic, cultural and recreational sites of San Francisco are only a two-hour drive from the campus.

CSUS Offers

A Beautiful Campus Setting

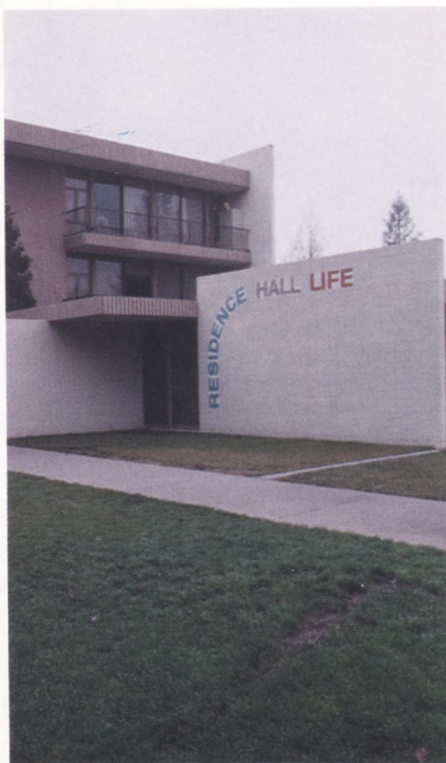

The location of the CSUS campus, located alongside the historic American River on the eastern edge of Sacramento, is as vital now as it was more than 100 years ago when the site served as the western trailhead for the Pony Express. Originally housed on the campus of the Sacramento Junior College, the University moved to its present site of nearly 300 acres in 1955. The tree-studded campus, with over 25 buildings, has an enrollment of more than 24,000 students. Projected enrollment increases have prompted a flurry of planned facility developments in the next few years, including a new engineering building, a five-story classroom building, a major library addition, a new children's center, a second story addition to the bookstore, and a multi-level parking garage. Also planned is a major addition to the residence halls, currently housing more than 1,000 single students in facilities among the most attractive in California public higher education.

An important adjunct to the campus is the Aquatics Center, located on Lake Natomas, ten miles east of the campus. The center provides water sports safety classroom instruction and recreational activities and since 1985 has served as the host of the prestigious Pacific Coast Rowing Championships.

CSUS's Student Life-Activities, Services, Opportunities!

"Something for everyone—and more!" truly reflects the variety of activities available to CSUS students both on campus and in the community.

The Associated Students, Inc. (ASI) provides the framework for many campus based activities. Operating on a budget of nearly $1 million dollars a year, ASI sponsors a variety of activities and services, including recreational outings, a bike shop, child care center, community garden and an aquatics center.

The University Union is the center of campus activity. The Union provides food service options, from a snack to a full course meal, recreational activities and a place to relax or study between classes. A continuous variety of free entertainment is conducted in the Union including concerts, films, performing arts, speakers, dances, etc.

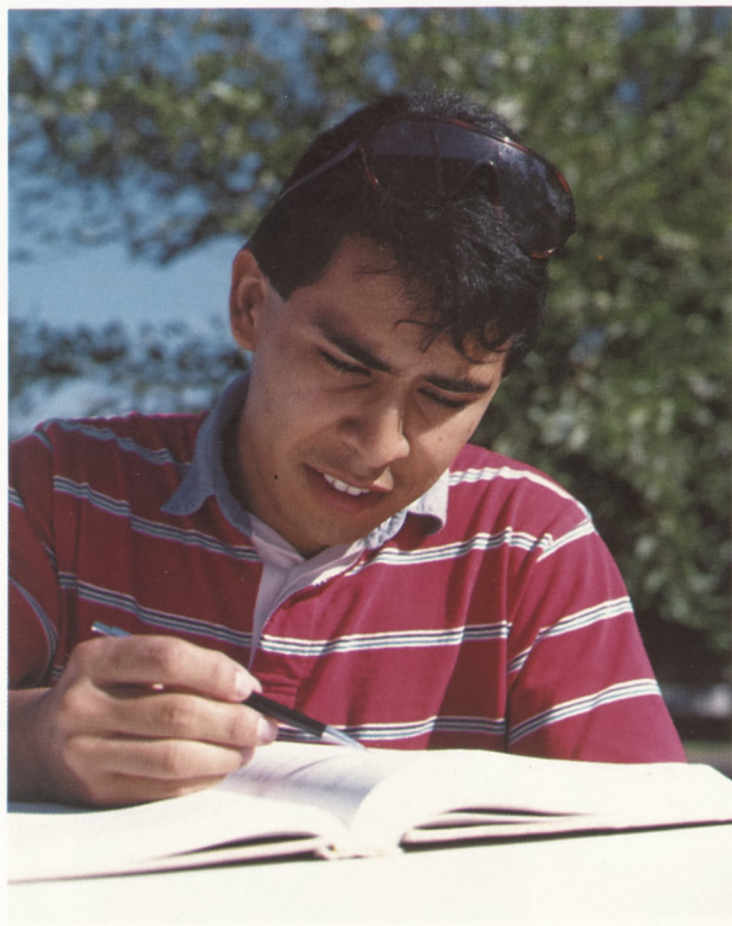

Also found on the CSUS campus are over 150 student organizations including cultural, departmental/professional, service, recreational, fraternities and sororities, honorary, religious and special interest groups.

Residence hall students have their own activity program, complemented by lighted tennis and basketball courts, swimming pool and sauna. If that's not enough, students can walk across the Guy West Bridge to the several coffeehouses along University Avenue, take in a Sacramento Kings game at Arco Arena, visit the Railroad Museum, History Center and Crocker Art Gallery in downtown Sacramento or participate in the night life in "Old Sacramento."

"Something for Everyone—and More!"

CSUS Offers

Athletics for Both Spectators and Participants

Intercollegiate and intramural athletics are an important part of campus life at CSUS. In the near future, all intercollegiate athletics will be Division 1 (except football). The facilities are among the best in the area. CSUS offers scholarships to men in Basketball, Baseball, and Football and to women in Basketball, Softball, and Volleyball.

"The Big Game Is a Series of Events, Parties, and Festivities."

CSUS Enrolls

A Rich and Diverse Blend of Students

CSUS students come from every "nook and cranny" of the community, from across the state and nation, and from throughout the world. The University provides students from these very diverse backgrounds with a rare opportunity to interact with each other intellectually, culturally and socially in a collegiate setting.

More than 100 nations are represented in the University's student community. Likewise, a number of CSUS students enroll at cooperating overseas universities, and earn credit toward degree objectives, as part of the prestigious California State University International Programs.

The University is continuing and strengthening its attempts to attract and retain students from ethnic minority, low income, and other backgrounds traditionally underrepresented in higher education. This "educational equity" effort involves the entire University community. Offices providing specific assistance to non-traditional students include: Student Affirmative Action, the Educational Opportunity Program, Students with Disabilities, and CAMP. Their efforts are supplemented by specific advising and academic preparation programs provided by the faculty.

Although over ninety percent of the approximately 1500 new freshmen are nineteen years old or younger the average student age remains in the mid-20's. The PASAR program serves the increasing number of older students who are "re-entering", often after a long lapse in their education.

There's a Lot Going On at CSUS

CSUS's Instructional Programs Offer Academic Challenges and Opportunities

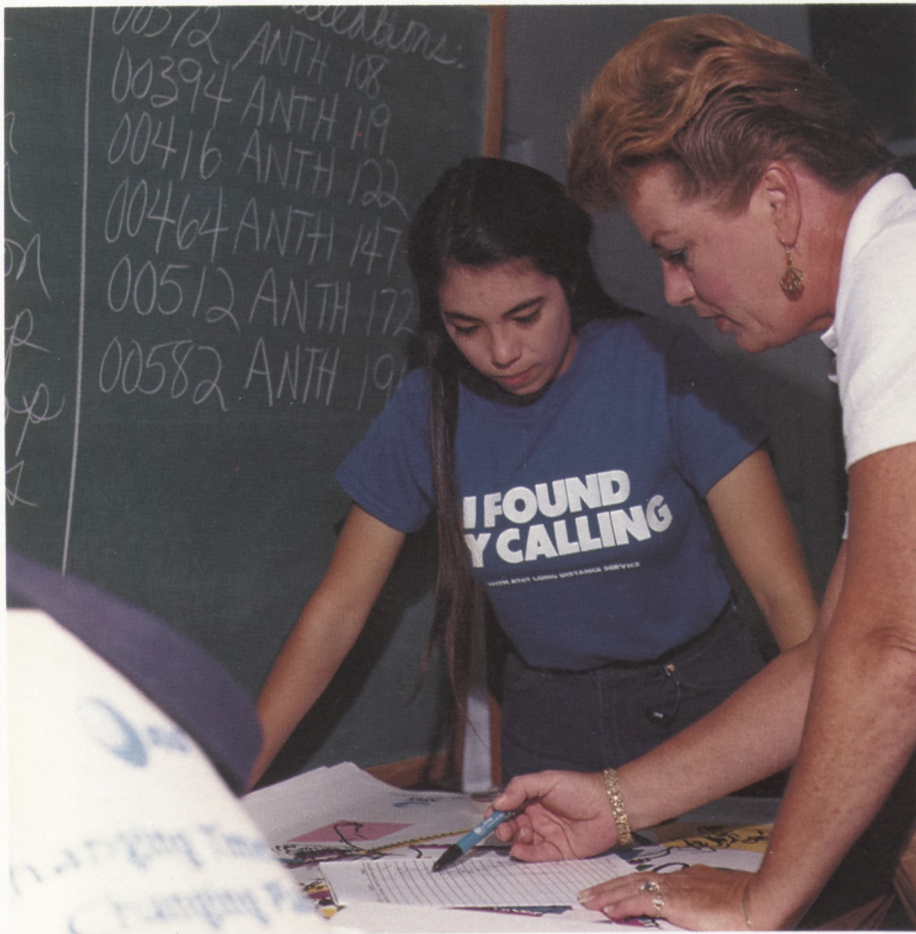

The strength of the University's instructional program is the commitment of its faculty to teaching and undergraduate education. Full professors, teaching at all class levels, bring with them just the right blend of theoretical training and professional experience.

CSUS students are not lost in a vast educational machine as is often the case at many other large collegiate institutions. The University's reputation of "Big, but not too big" is well illustrated in the classroom. Class size is less than what would be expected in a university the size of CSUS. More than 85% of the classes enroll less than 30 students, while more than 97% enroll less than 50 students.

REFUGEE'S STORY OF CAMBODIA WINS PRIZE

Griff Field
Staff Writer

A young refugee's account of her harrowing experiences in wartorn Cambodia was one of twelve student compositions honored when the CSUS English department presented its annual Bazzanella Literary Awards Tuesday in the La Playa Room.

Hin Chhen's honorable mention in the expository prose category for "An Unforgettable Place" was the first such recognition for an English-as-a-second-language student in the writing contest's nine year history.

Chhen, a sophomore nursing major, is the kind of student that awards committee co-chair Robert Olmstead would like to see in greater numbers in future competitions.

"This is not a contest for English majors," Olmstead said. "My goal is for an accounting major to win the poetry award. I just know there are engineering students and psychology students out there with poems or short stories inside of them."

In addition to Chhen, the winners in expository prose were Karen Bijlsma, first place, and Laura Rasberry, second.

Scott Crider was first in the critical analysis category. Nedra Evers took second place, and Marijean Gallo-way, honorable mention. Crider won honorable mention in the same category last year.

In short fiction Steve Cook took the top award, Marshall, second, and Laura Lynn Russell, honorable mention.

John Anton Piller won the award for poetry and Maria Fernandez was second. Senior English major Mark Zeman took an honorable mention with his poem "Rally Flyer," making him the first participant to place in all four divisions of the competition. Zeman was a winner in the critical analysis category in 1988 and in expository prose and short fiction in 1987.

The contest, named in honor of the late university administrator and English Professor Dominic J. Bazzanella, is the largest endowed collegiate literary competition of its kind in the country, according to Olmstead.

"The competition is unique in the amount of prize money, the number of categories and the fact that it's open to all students," he said.

Inaugurated in 1980, the competition got by initially on small contributions from the campus and the local community for its prize money. The awards were correspondingly small — $100 for first place, $25 for second. In 1984 Sacramento businessman and frequent CSUS benefactor Angelo Tsakopoulos came on board with a commitment to establish an endowment fund that will eventually total $20,000.

With donations from new contributors, interest from the endowment and supplemental gifts from Tsakopoulos, the Bazzanella contest now offer $500 for first place in each category of competition and $100 for second.

With the growth of the monetary award has come increased status.

WE'RE NO. 1! WE'RE NO. 1! WE'RE NO. 1!

HORNET BASEBALL GRABS BRASS RING

Mike Wood
Staff Writer

The Hornet baseball team achieved a tremendous milestone when it was ranked No. 1 in the nation in the latest NCAA Division II poll, which was released Monday.

The honor of being named No. 1 was underscored by the fact that the vote for CSUS was unanimous. This was the first time ever that the Hornet baseball team has been ranked No. 1.

CSUS HEADS FOR FROZEN NORTH

Joe Krieg
Staff Writer

Since a football team plays only once a week, each game is considered "a big game" to the participants.

But when CSUS Head Coach Bob Mattos and his Hornets take the field against the North Dakota State Bison tomorrow in the third round of the NCAA Division II playoffs, they'll know some games are bigger than others.

Tomorrow's game will end the season for one team and extend the other's by one game: the championship game in Florence, Ala. on Dec. 10.

The top-ranked Bison have established themselves as a perennial powerhouse when it comes to Division II football. They have competed in five championships in the 80's and won three of the them, including back to back titles in 1985 and 1986. This season they compiled a 12-0 record and advanced to the third round by beating Millersville, Pa. 36-26 after trailing 20-6.

CSUS is having its finest season at 10-2 and has made a lasting impression in its first Division II playoff appearance. The Hornets reached the third round by clobbering North Carolina Central 56-7 last Saturday. They beat rival UC Davis the previous week.

The Hornets are bubbling over with confidence — and with good reason. In the past three weeks they have outscored their opponents 152-21.

"We have the right chemistry and a lot of confidence right now," said Mattos. "I feel we can beat anyone right now. Our guys believe in themselves. That's the bottom line."

Though the game will be played on the cold Astroturf in Fargo, N.D., Mattos remains undaunted. After all, the Hornets were willing to play in Siberia, so they can't be too disappointed with North Dakota.

CSUS has been comfortable on the road this season, picking up four big wins away from home. Toomey Field in Davis was where the Hornets both ended their 18-year Causeway Classic drought and advanced to the second round of the playoffs.

They beat the University of the Pacific Tigers in Stockton and travelled to Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo where they rallied from a 15-point deficit to defeat the Mustangs.

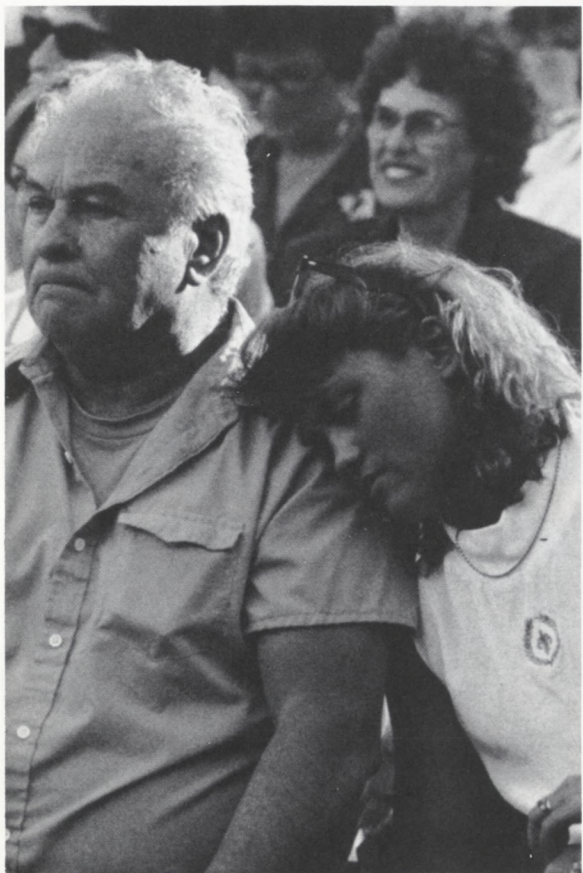

Both teams have exhibited offenses that can score a lot of points in a hurry.

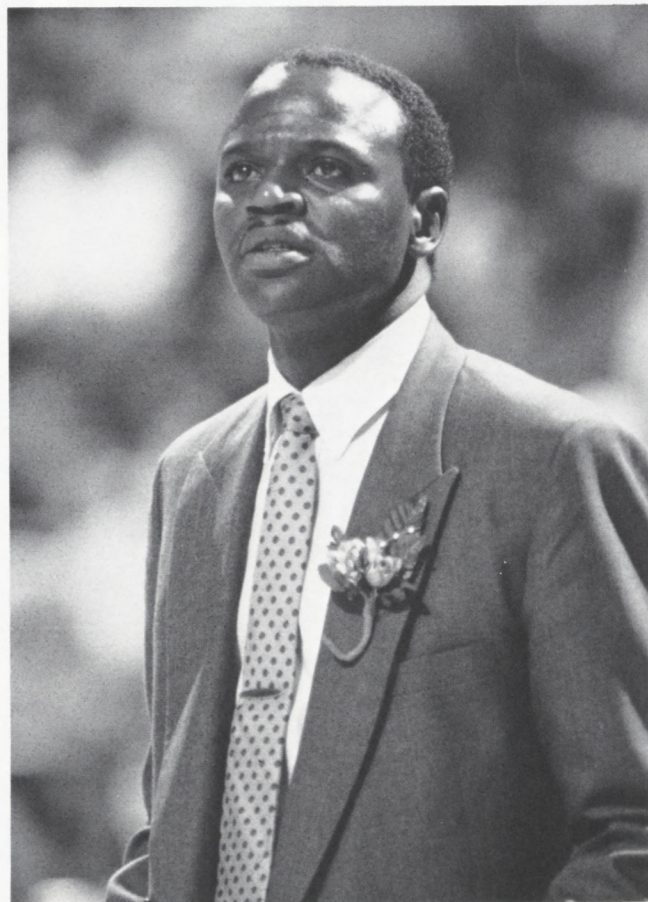

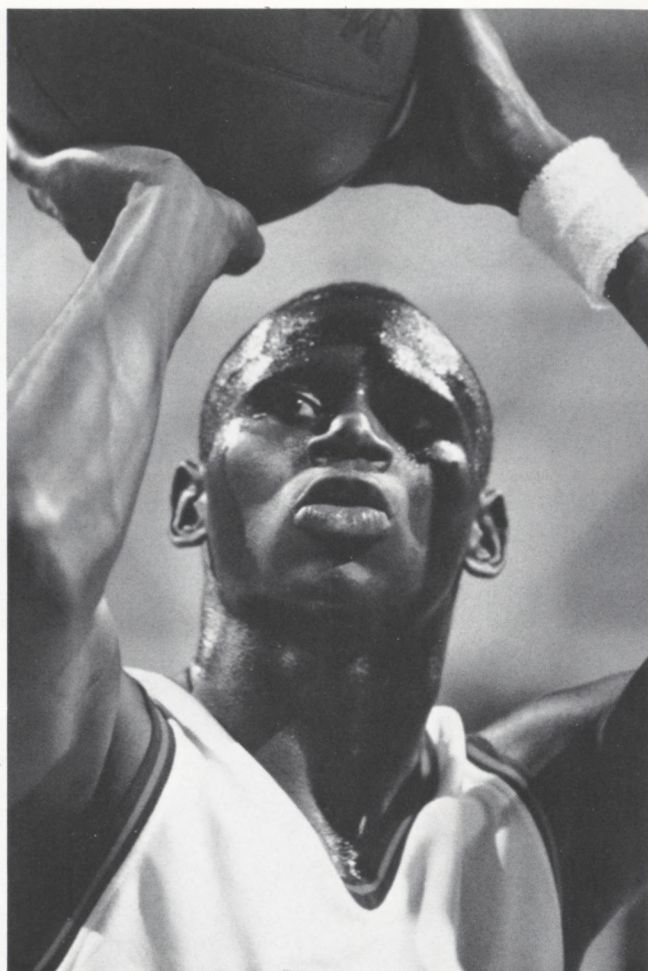

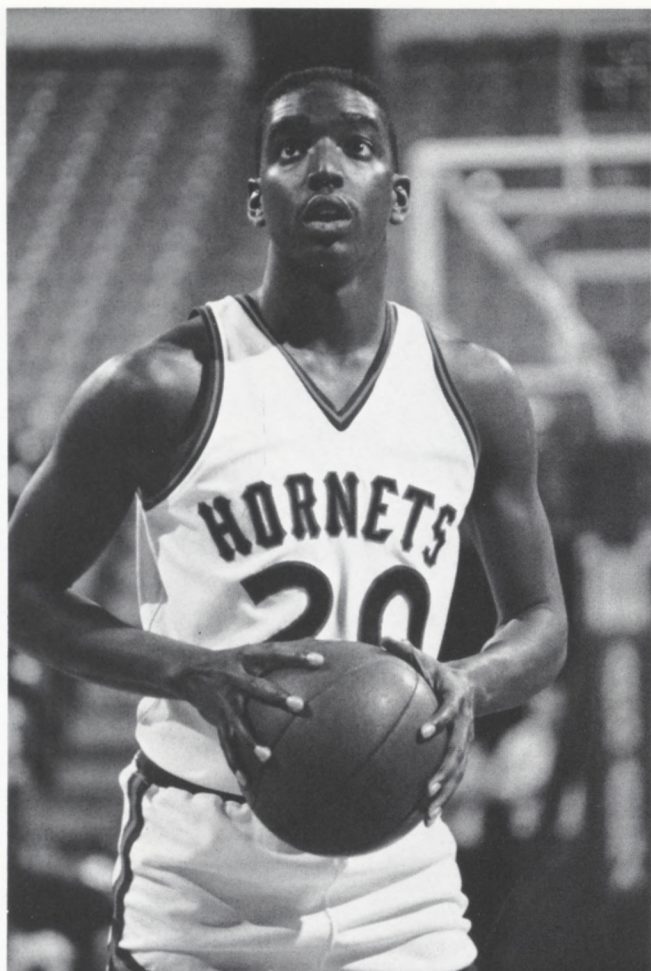

The Bison offer a complicated version of the option offense, called the veer, something the Hornets haven't seen too much of this season. When run properly, it can be deadly and extremely tough to stop.

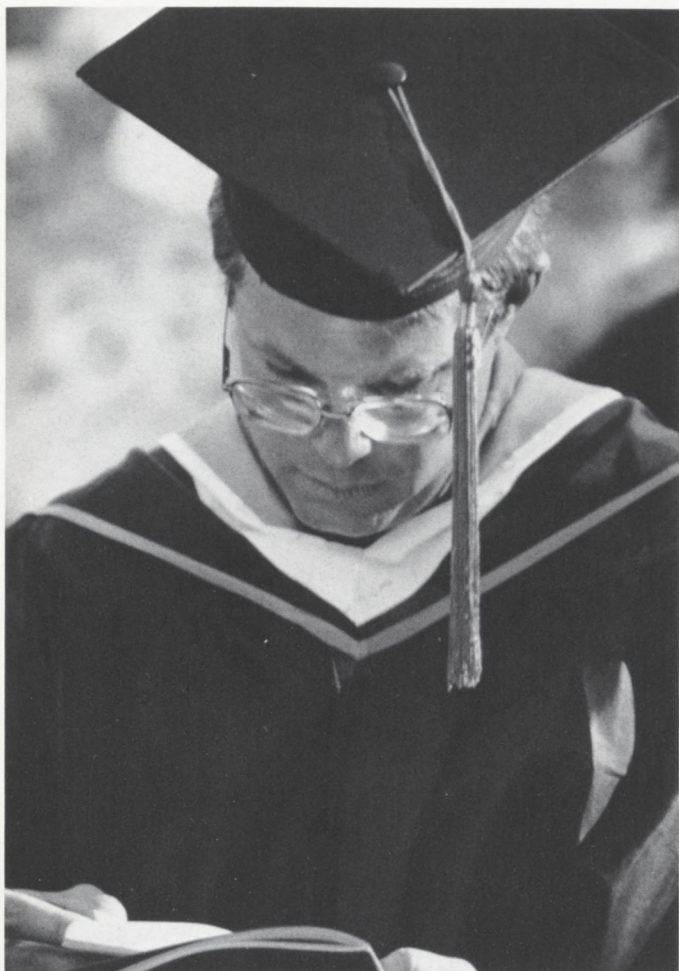

CSUS had a sneak preview of this offense earlier this season against Southern Utah. The Thunderbirds picked apart the Hornets for 147 yards rushing in the first half, but CSUS shut them down in the second half, yielding only 30 yards after intermission.
